The first step in the management of the patient is to determine the extent of the injury and to identify the organs involved.

The next step is to stabilize the patient and to control any bleeding that may be present.

The third step is to transport the patient to the hospital as quickly as possible.

Once the patient has been transported to the hospital, the next step is to perform a physical examination.

The physical examination should include a thorough history and physical examination.

The next step is to perform a laboratory examination of the patient's blood and urine.

The laboratory examination should include a complete blood count, a urinalysis, and a serum chemistry panel.

The next step is to perform a diagnostic imaging study of the patient's abdomen.

The diagnostic imaging study should include a computed tomography (CT) scan of the abdomen.

The CT scan should be performed with intravenous contrast to help identify any areas of active bleeding.

Once the CT scan has been completed, the next step is to perform a laparotomy.

The laparotomy should be performed to identify the source of the bleeding and to perform any necessary repairs.

Once the laparotomy has been completed, the next step is to close the patient's abdomen.

The abdomen should be closed with a layered closure to help reduce the risk of hernia.

Once the abdomen has been closed, the next step is to monitor the patient's vital signs.

The patient's vital signs should be monitored closely to ensure that the patient is stable.

Once the patient's vital signs are stable, the next step is to provide supportive care.

Supportive care should include fluid resuscitation and pain management.

The patient should be monitored closely for any signs of complications.
